Finding the Route Together Passage B

A A school club organised its first orienteering event. In orienteering, participants use a map to find marked points in a chosen area. Club leader Tess wanted the event to reward careful decisions, not just fast running. She chose a familiar country park and invited a trained organiser to help plan two routes. The short route stayed near the visitor centre. The longer route reached a wooded area, but neither route crossed the busy road beside the park.

B Before the event, pairs practised reading a simple map in the school grounds. They learned to match symbols with features such as a path junction or a bridge. Each partner had to explain a route choice before the pair moved. Tess noticed that one student usually held the map while the other simply followed. She introduced a change: partners exchanged the map at every practice point. This helped both students take part in navigation instead of leaving all decisions to the more confident person.

C On the event day, each pair received a paper map and a card. At every marked point, a volunteer stamped the card with a different shape. The stamps showed which points had been visited; they were not clues about the next direction. Pairs started at two-minute intervals so they were less likely to follow the group ahead. A teacher kept a list of everyone on each route, and participants returned to the registration desk even if they chose to stop early.

Finding the Route Together Passage B

D The first results surprised the club. The fastest running pair missed a point and had to return to find it. A slower pair visited every point in the right order because they paused to check the map at junctions. Afterwards, Tess asked pairs to describe one difficult decision, not just report their finishing time. Several said that disagreeing calmly had helped them notice mistakes. The organiser explained that one event could not show who would always navigate best, especially when some participants already knew parts of the park.

E For the next event, the club planned to keep the short route but change some of the marked points on the longer one. Students suggested clearer numbers on the cards and a larger map for anyone who found the symbols difficult to read. Tess agreed to test both changes during practice. The club also decided to record how partners shared decisions. Winning still mattered to some students, but the event had given the group another way to think about progress in sport.

Questions 16-18 Follow the model

Use the model to help you make one focused paragraph of 4-5 sentences. Write key words, then record your answer.

16. Explain why a sports club needs support. Give a specific example and clarify its benefit.

Model: Our club needs help with transport. For example, some players cannot reach away games. A shared coach would let them travel with the team. In other words, transport support would help more players take part.

17. Respond to someone who asks what a sports fee pays for. Use a concrete example.

Model: The fee helps pay for our lessons. For example, a coach visits us every Tuesday. The money covers the coach's time. It does not just pay for using the field.

18. Give an opinion about free beginner sessions. Support it with a reason and a possible result.

Model: I definitely support free beginner sessions. New players can try the sport before paying. For example, a student can attend one lesson and ask questions. If they enjoy it, they may join the club.

Questions 19-20 Follow the model

Use the model to help you make one focused paragraph of 4-5 sentences. Write key words, then record your answer.

19. Explain a sports spending priority. Contrast it with another possible purchase.

Model: Our team should buy new balls first. The old ones are difficult to use. New shirts would look nice, but they would not improve practice. Basic equipment is the more useful choice now.

20. Clarify a claim that a sports event is too expensive. Explain which cost concerns you.

Model: When I say the event is expensive, I mean the travel cost. The entry ticket itself is quite cheap. For example, the bus journey costs more than the ticket. A shared ride could make the visit more affordable.
