A SMALL CHANGE AT LUNCHTIME Passage B

A River Street Cafe is a business selling sandwiches and hot lunches. Maya, its owner, worked with three other people. The cafe was busy between noon and two, but quiet later in the afternoon. Some customers left the queue before buying anything. At closing time, staff still threw away unsold food. Maya did not immediately hire another cook. For two weeks, staff wrote arrival, payment and food-ready times on order tickets. The times helped her see which part of a visit caused the delay. She also counted the portions of food left each day. She wanted to reduce both waiting and waste.

B Maya introduced a four-week lunch pre-order trial. Customers could reserve one of three dishes already on the menu. Keeping the choice small made planning easier for the kitchen. Orders had to arrive before half past ten that morning, either by phone or on a paper card at the till. Each card recorded the customer's name, dish and collection time. Staff gave every booking a number. Customers chose one of three half-hour collection periods starting at noon. The card explained that a booking reserved a meal; it did not promise that all customers could arrive at exactly the same moment.

A SMALL CHANGE AT LUNCHTIME Passage B

C The cafe accepted no more than ten pre-orders for each collection period. This limit left kitchen time for people who came in without booking. Those customers could still buy lunch in the usual way. Pre-order customers used a separate collection counter, so they did not join the payment queue. Staff finished hot meals after the customer's arrival rather than leaving them to go cold. The same dish had the same price for both groups. Changes or cancellations were accepted by phone until eleven, giving staff time to adjust before cooking. Customers who came late sometimes had to wait while the team served people already there.

D During the trial, the average customer wait fell from eight minutes to four. Unsold food fell from twelve portions a day to five. Staff, however, needed fifteen extra minutes each morning to organise the bookings. The cafe sold more lunches, but Maya did not yet know whether profit had risen after paying for this extra work. Weather could also affect the figures: a rainy week brought fewer people to the street. She compared the same weekdays before and during the trial to make the comparison fairer. She kept records of waiting, waste and staff time, rather than judging success from sales alone.

A SMALL CHANGE AT LUNCHTIME Passage B

E Feedback helped Maya change the final system. Customers asked for a vegetarian dish, so she added one to the pre-order choices. Several regular customers preferred the telephone or paper cards, and both methods remained available. Staff now checked a board each morning showing which dishes could be ordered that day. On Fridays, Maya accepted fewer advance orders because one employee needed time to train a new colleague. She planned to review the limit when the training finished. The cafe kept the useful parts of the trial but changed details when people needed something different. A successful system had to work for customers and staff.

Questions 1-10 Summary completion

Write ONE WORD from the indicated paragraphs. Questions 1-5: A-B. Questions 6-10: C-D.

Maya gathered information for (1) _____ weeks, using order (2) _____ to record the stages of a customer visit. She then introduced a pre-order trial lasting (3) _____ weeks. Customers could choose one of (4) _____ existing dishes and book by phone or paper card before half past ten. Staff gave each booking a (5) _____, and customers selected a collection period.

Each collection period allowed a maximum of (6) _____ pre-orders, leaving time for walk-in customers. Booked meals were collected at a separate (7) _____, and hot food was finished after the customer's (8) _____. During the trial, the average wait fell from eight minutes to (9) _____, and less food was left unsold. However, the extra booking work meant Maya could not yet be sure whether (10) _____ had risen. She also considered weather and compared the same weekdays.

Questions 11-15 Order and speak

Put sentences A-C in order. Record the opening, then read all three sentences in the correct order. Do not read the letters.

11. Give advice about an unclear price.

Opening: Customers need to know what they will pay.

A	I think the owner should add clear labels.
B	The stall has no prices on display.
C	Without those prices, people keep asking the same question.

12. Suggest a way to reduce waste.

Opening: I would begin with the food left at closing time.

A	Those leftovers suggest it prepares too many.
B	The café throws away unsold sandwiches.
C	The owner could make fewer and review the results.

13. Advise a business with slow service.

Opening: There is one change I would test first.

A	Why not ask another worker to handle calls at busy times?
B	Orders wait because only one person packs them.
C	That person also answers the phone.

14. Explain a cautious equipment choice.

Opening: A lower price is only part of the decision.

A	I would compare support options before buying it.
B	The cheapest machine has no repair service.
C	Without that service, a fault could stop the business.

15. Suggest a way to collect feedback.

Opening: We should hear from the people who use the shop.

A	She could ask those customers one short question.
B	Their answers might help her decide what to change.
C	The owner wants to know why customers leave.

Questions 16-18 Follow the model

Use the model to help you make one focused paragraph of 4-5 sentences. Write key words, then record your answer.

16. A café has long queues at lunchtime. Give advice, a reason and a possible result.

Model: The shop is difficult to find from the street. I think the owner should add a clear sign. People could then see the entrance more easily. The owner could check whether more people come in.

17. A business has a small budget for equipment. Give cautious advice and one limitation.

Model: If I were the owner, I would rent the extra machine first. Renting would cost less at the start. However, it could cost more over several years. I would compare both totals before deciding.

18. A shop keeps running out of bags. Suggest a solution and how to check it.

Model: The café often runs out of cups. Why not record how many it uses each day? The owner could use those figures to plan orders. She should review the plan during busy weeks.

Questions 19-20 Follow the model

Use the model to help you make one focused paragraph of 4-5 sentences. Write key words, then record your answer.

19. An owner wants to offer a discount. Give a benefit, a caution and advice.

Model: A free delivery offer could attract new customers. However, the business would pay the delivery cost. I think the owner should test it on a few nearby orders. The results could show whether it is affordable.

20. A new shop has few visitors. Suggest how to investigate before making a large change.

Model: The owner thinks customers dislike the menu. I would ask a few customers before replacing it. They might explain a different problem, such as opening times. Their answers could help the owner choose a useful change.
