Water Buses on the Old Canal Passage B

A For years, the old canal in Merrow had been used mostly by small leisure boats. When the city began a water-bus service, planners did not describe it as a replacement for every street bus. They studied where passengers already changed between buses, trains and bicycles. The first route linked the railway station, the central market and two riverside neighbourhoods. At each landing, signs showed walking times to the nearest bus stop, because a pleasant journey on water was of little use if the final connection was unclear.

B The ticket system was designed around these connections. A passenger could use the same travel card on a water bus and an ordinary city bus within ninety minutes. Visitors could buy a day ticket, but residents asked for a lower-priced weekly option because they were more likely to make repeated work journeys. The city did not make every trip free for card holders. It wanted to test whether a combined fare was understandable before deciding how much public support the service would need.

C The busiest landing was beside the market. On Saturday mornings, people arriving with bags sometimes blocked passengers who were trying to leave the boat. Staff first marked separate waiting and exit areas with painted lines, but the lines disappeared under a crowd. They then moved the timetable board away from the narrow entrance and asked one member of staff to direct queues when a boat arrived. This reduced confusion, although it did not create more space on the landing.

Water Buses on the Old Canal Passage B

D Weather created a different limit. Strong wind made it unsafe to stop at two exposed landings, while heavy rain made the covered waiting area more important than planners had expected. The operator sent cancellation messages through the travel-card app and displayed them at bus stops near the canal. Some residents said these notices arrived too late when they had already left home. The operator therefore tested an earlier morning forecast message, but it could not promise that every change in wind would be predicted perfectly.

E After three months, the city found that visitors valued the route's view of historic warehouses, while residents mainly valued a reliable connection to the station. These priorities sometimes conflicted: a longer sightseeing stop could delay commuters. The service kept one direct morning journey and scheduled a slower visitor-focused trip later in the day. The report described this as a local transport option with weather and capacity limits, not proof that every city canal should carry public boats. Officials also compared boarding numbers with the number of people who left at the station. That comparison helped them see whether a full boat was carrying commuters, sightseers, or a mixture of both, and it would guide later departure times.

Questions 16-18 Follow the model

Use the model to help you make one focused paragraph of 4-5 sentences. Write key words, then record your answer.

16. Recommend a safer crossing and expand your reason with an example.

Model: I recommend a crossing officer near the school gate. Cars stop close to the crossing at eight o’clock. For example, the officer could guide children across before lessons. This would make the busiest time easier to manage.

17. Recommend an extra bus service and predict a result.

Model: The bus company should add one service after school. The buses are full at four o’clock. This would give students another choice. As a result, fewer passengers might need to wait.

18. Recommend a cycle-route change and give a clear example.

Model: The council should show a cycle route through the park. The bridge is difficult in heavy rain. For example, signs could direct cyclists away from the exposed road. This route would give them another option.

Questions 19-20 Follow the model

Use the model to help you make one focused paragraph of 4-5 sentences. Write key words, then record your answer.

19. Recommend smarter signals and explain the cause.

Model: The junction needs smarter signals because traffic changes during the day. Fixed timings make queues longer after work. The new signals could respond to busy lanes. This could improve traffic flow.

20. Recommend a covered bicycle area and expand the benefit.

Model: The council could build a covered bicycle area beside the station. Cyclists need a clear place to leave bicycles. For example, a covered area would protect bicycles from rain. As a result, more people might cycle to the station.

Questions 16-18 Follow the model

Use the model to help you make one focused paragraph of 4-5 sentences. Write your own answer with different details.

16. Recommend a later train after a school event. Use the first conditional and end with a concluding recommendation.

Model: The last bus leaves before the concert finishes. If the company adds one later service, visitors will have another way home. This could reduce the number of people waiting for taxis. The company should therefore test the service on concert nights.

17. Explain why a station needs a route map. Use unless and finish with a clear conclusion.

Model: The ferry terminal has no clear map of its exits. Unless a map is added, visitors will keep asking staff how to reach the town. A simple diagram could show the walking route. The terminal should therefore provide one near the exit.

18. Recommend a protected bus stop near a school. Use if and give one example before your concluding sentence.

Model: The library bus stop has no shelter. If a roof is added, passengers will have somewhere dry to wait. For example, students could keep their books out of the rain. The council should therefore consider a small shelter.

Questions 19-20 Follow the model

Use the model to help you make one focused paragraph of 4-5 sentences. Write your own answer with different details.

19. Argue for covered bicycle parking at a station. Use the first conditional and end by restating the benefit.

Model: The harbour needs secure bicycle racks. If riders can lock their bicycles there, they will be able to continue their journey by ferry. This would give commuters another travel option. Bicycle parking could therefore improve access to the ferry.

20. Explain why two bus queues need separate signs. Use unless and include a concluding recommendation.

Model: The station has two taxi queues but no labels. Unless the waiting areas are marked, visitors will remain unsure where to stand. Signs could distinguish booked taxis from the public queue. Clear labels would therefore help both drivers and passengers.
