Passage A - Visiting Japanese Shrines and Temples Respectfully

A Shrines and temples are central to Japanese culture, but they belong to different faiths. A shrine is connected with the Shinto belief system and is marked by a torii gate. A temple serves the Buddhist tradition and often has a Sanmon gate, sometimes with guardian statues. These differences explain why some actions at the two places are not the same. The JNTO guide presents these distinctions so travellers can enter sacred spaces with care.

B At a shrine gate, a common first step is to bow once before passing through. Visitors should then walk a little to the left or right of the centre and never through the middle. Someone may expect the centre to be the most direct route, but the guide gives the opposite advice. The bow and the route are both parts of respectful entry. They also prepare the visitor to notice instructions instead of assuming that the quickest movement is the right one.

C Before proceeding inside a shrine, visitors may find a temizuya, or water pavilion. Purification, or cleansing, follows a clear order. First, use the right hand to hold the ladle and pour water over the left hand, so the left hand is washed first. Next, change hands and wash the right hand. Finally, pour water into the left hand, rinse the mouth, and spit beside the fountain. The ladle must never touch the mouth directly. Each hand therefore has a separate role at different points in the process.

Passage A - Visiting Japanese Shrines and Temples Respectfully

D At a shrine altar, or prayer place, the ceremony has a detailed sequence. Toss a coin into the offering box and ring the bell to greet the shrine's god. Bow twice, clap twice, and then say a prayer. Finish by bowing once more before leaving so the next worshipper can approach. The number and order of these actions matter because they distinguish shrine practice from temple prayer. Following the steps carefully is more useful than copying only the most visible movement.

E At a Buddhist temple altar, the visitor makes an offering and joins both hands in silent prayer. There is no need to clap. Some temples also have a water pavilion where the same purification steps can be used. Many sell incense, or scented sticks, to light before praying. People may fan smoke towards themselves because of a belief that it has healing powers. The shared water practice and different altar practice show why the guide treats shrines and temples as related but not interchangeable.

F One aspect concerns conduct inside temple and shrine buildings. Visitors may need shoes that are easy to remove and clean socks because some temple buildings require shoes to come off. Signs may show that photography is prohibited in certain areas, and those limits should be followed. The guide also asks visitors not to speak loudly or shout and to respect worshippers. These practical rules support the same message as the ritual instructions: observe the place closely, follow its specific guidance, and avoid treating a sacred space as ordinary entertainment.

Questions 1-10 Summary completion

Write ONE WORD from the indicated paragraphs. Questions 1-5: A-B. Questions 6-10: C-D.

A (1) _____ is connected with a belief system called (2) _____ and is marked by a (3) _____ gate. A temple may have guardian (4) _____. At the entrance to the first of these places, visitors should (5) _____ once before passing through.

At the water pavilion, use the right hand to hold the (6) _____ while the (7) _____ hand is washed first. The utensil must never touch the (8) _____. At the altar, offer a (9) _____ before ringing the (10) _____.
