Passage B - Preparing for Business Meetings in Brazil

A The 2019 Investment Guide to Brasil from Brazil's Ministry of Economy says business etiquette is not particularly different from practices in North America or Europe, although several aspects deserve attention. It describes Brazilian hosts as communicative and warm. Outside the workplace, the culture is often informal, and kindness and good humour are usually viewed as good manners. In business, interpersonal relationships can matter, so being communicative can be productive. These are general patterns rather than rules for every person or organisation.

B Portuguese is Brazil's official language, and the guide stresses that it differs considerably from Spanish. Visitors should not expect English or Spanish to be understood, especially outside major cities. Brazilian hosts often appreciate an effort to say a few words in Portuguese. A visitor who does not speak Portuguese should tell the host. Because language and culture vary between regions, the guide recommends travelling with a local guide or researching the specific region before the visit.

C At business introductions, handshakes with women and men are common. Hugs may occur after people have developed some familiarity, but they are unlikely during introductions. International business clothing is the normal dress code, and business cards are regularly exchanged. A visitor can greet a new contact warmly while still allowing their connection to develop. A professional appearance and a handshake fit the source guidance, whereas assuming that a hug is required does not.

Passage B - Preparing for Business Meetings in Brazil

D Brazilians often use first names from the beginning of contact, but this does not prove familiarity. Titles such as Senhor, Senhora and Doutor can appear before a first name. An email is acceptable when first contacting a medium-sized or large company. The guide also recommends making at least one phone call before the meeting. Business contacts should normally choose the meeting place. If the choice belongs to the visitor, restaurants and cafés are possible because meetings often occur in less formal environments.

E For punctuality, the guide advises leaving ahead of time. Traffic can be extensive in São Paulo and Rio de Janeiro, especially during rush hours from 7 to 10 in the morning and from 5 to 8 in the evening. Visitors should not interpret a Brazilian contact's lateness as disinterest or bad manners. Meetings may continue beyond their planned end time, so arranging two meetings in sequence can create problems. Extra travel time and space between appointments are therefore sensible preparations.

F Christmas, New Year and Carnival can slow work because many people travel or spend time with family. Some services are interrupted, and certain businesses may remain closed for as long as a week. The guide advises scheduling important business before these holidays or waiting until they have passed. It does not claim that every office follows one schedule or closes for a full week. Checking dates before fixing an important meeting helps a visitor use the guide without turning a possibility into a universal rule.
